Continue Your Journey with a graduate degree from IPFW

Indiana University–Purdue University Fort Wayne (IPFW) Office of Graduate Studies offers 15 distinctive Indiana University and Purdue University master’s degree programs in nursing, engineering, business, and more. We are also preparing to launch our first doctoral program, the Doctor of Nurse Practice, with the first students to be admitted spring 2015. Our programs are specifically targeted to strengthen the region’s intellectual, economic, social, and cultural development by helping students gain a competitive edge and distinguish themselves in today’s challenging job market.

Faculty Mentors, Strong Partnerships, and Flexibility
One important differentiator for IPFW Graduate Studies is our internationally recognized faculty. Our talented, supportive professors help students succeed by treating them like colleagues and providing incredible opportunities for hands-on research and mentoring. Another way we differentiate ourselves is through more than 250 partnerships in northeast Indiana, allowing graduate students to gain invaluable on-the-job experience and make career connections. Partnerships also help ensure our programs are responsive to today’s needs and what’s next. According to Dean of Graduate Studies Carol Sternberger, “IPFW graduate programs integrate current trends, while maintaining a vision for the future. Faculty listen to industry, business, and educational leaders and reinvent their courses. And student research often comes directly from employers.” IPFW also offers flexibility for your life today and can accommodate part-time or full-time students.
